1. In May 1953 the Chinese Communist Customs Office was the primary organization for the control of harbor activity at Tientsin. The Customs Office was under the Customs General Office, which was established in the Ministry of Foreign Trade in January 1953. The Customs General Office was amalgamated from a number of former district customs offices, including an independent general office and the Foreign Trade Control Bureaus which had been formerly under the Ministry of Foreign Trade.

2. The Tientsin Customs Office had branch offices at Ch'inhuangtao and T'angku; the Shanghai Customs Office at Wusung (N 31-23, E 121-31), Wenchou (N 28-01, E 120-38), and Ningpo (N 29-54, E 121-32); and the Tsingtao Customs Office at Chefoo (N 37-32, E 121-24) and Lienyun (N 34-43, E 119-22). At each of these customs offices there were sections for export, import, foreign exchange, cargo and security.

3. The Water Police Bureau, which has a similar function as the Public Safety Bureau, was set up at every port to maintain maritime safety and peace and order. The bureau also investigated smuggling, inspected seamen and passengers, and conducted the surveillance of suspects and the arrest of spies. Seized commodities were turned over to the customs office concerned.

4. The Shipping Control Bureau of the Ministry of Communications cooperated with the customs offices by designating anchorage and wharfage for ships.

5. A 5 to 10-ton patrol boat was manned by members of the Customs Service and the Water Police Bureau. The Water Police officers wore khaki uniforms and customs officers wore dark blue uniforms and round caps with a star-shaped insignia. A navy patrol boat of 30 to 100 tons was often seen along the coast near Tientsin.

7. On 7 May a new pier was under construction in the Ts'angk'ou area, Tsingtao. The pier, when completed, will be used by steel manufacturing plants for the loading and unloading of raw materials. Four large cranes were being installed in the vicinity of the pier.

8. On 16 May construction activity in the Tientsin harbor area was limited to the building of a warehouse on a pier. Two dredgers were dredging the harbor.
